SAY INVADERS PRUSSIA TO CALL BACK GERMANS

Having Done This Russian Force May Now be Withdrawn From Prussia—Switzerland Reports the Germans Have Been Ordered to Fall Back to the Rhine, Evacuating France, Belgium and Luxemburg—The German Army Showed New Strength Today and Berlin Claims They Are on the Offensive—Reported the Kaiser Will Go to Prussia and Assume Command—Servians Defeated in Hungary.

(By Associated Press.) London, Sept. 16.—Central News' Rome dispatches say Switzerland reports the Germans have been ordered to fall back to the Rhine's right bank, completely evacuating France, Belgium and Luxemburg.

The Daily News' French correspondent reports the French cavalry has frequently made brilliant charges, but too late, giving the retreating Germans time to post their artillery and mow the French horsemen down.

The second great battle is now apparently on north of the Aisne river, with the center of interest on the position of the German Crown Prince, which is apparently dangerous.

Although the Germans do not admit it, the French claim the Crown Prince not only has withdrawn from the investment of Verdun, but has left open only one way of retreat, via Longwy, thence probably into Luxemburg.

The extreme west end of today's battle is about fifty-five miles north-east of Paris.

Whether the Germans are now fighting to a finish or merely covering their retreat to the Meuse is unknown.

Petrograd experts now claim the Russian invasion of Prussia was a ruse which succeeded in its intention, namely, withdrawing the crack German forces from France to Prussia, and that Russia will now probably temporarily abandon Prussia.

An announcement says that on September 14 and 15 the German retreating rear guards were reinforced from the main German armies.

Today the Germans are showing a strong organization in certain positions on the above mentioned front, which includes the heights north and west of Rheims.

During the pursuit after the battle of the Marne, the Germans abandoned many prisoners. The French also captured a multitude of stragglers hidden in the forests.

CRIMSON CLOVER AS A WINTER COVER CROP

By A. H. LEIDIGH, Abromonist in Charge of Soil Improvement, Texas Agricultural Experiment Station.

The crimson clover plant is sown in the fall. It is used as a winter cover crop for orchards and fields in the South. When so used it protects the land from washing, enriches the soil and produces a crop to plow under for manure. It is also of value for hay and pasture.

Our open winters allow crimson clover to make growth during nearly every month. It thus uses the land at a time when it is not occupied by other crops. Corn or cotton seeded on the same fields in the spring will make a much better growth because of the fertility added and stored up by the clover. Its use is only advised in those parts of Texas where fall or winter rainfall occurs.

Crimson clover does best on loamy soils, but it will grow on either sandy or clay soils if given proper care. On poor soil a reasonable amount of fertilizer may have to be used. For this crop on ordinary poor soils the use of phosphoric acid fertilizer at the rate of 100 to 200 pounds to the acre is advisable. In case of deep sandy soils the same amount of kainit should also be added. The fertilizer should be applied and worked into the field before planting the crop.

The successful way to plant crimson clover is to seed it on land that has just raised a cultivated crop. By so doing, much labor is saved and the seed is planted before the other crops are harvested. Moisture and shallow covering of the seed are needed to start the plant. If the crop now in the land has been well cared for, the seed may be broadcasted and covered by any cultivating tools. If stubble fields or bare land have to be used, then special plowing and careful working down of the soil is necessary. It is important that such a seed bed be well formed and in an excellent state of cultivation.

The seed should be planted in August or early in September. Fifteen to twenty pounds of good seed are used to the acre. Broadcasting by hand or with a hand sower is the usual method of scattering the seed.

Where seeding is to be done in a corn field it may be practical to ride a horse, so as to throw the seed out above the corn stalks. The seed should be covered about an inch deep. While it is best to sow soon after a rain, it is nevertheless possible to seed the crop in dry ground and get a stand from rain which comes later.

Crimson clover is especially valuable because it secures nitrogen, that costly fertilizer, from the air and adds it to the soil. To do this the crop must be inoculated with the proper bacteria. Special directions for inoculation will be sent you from Washington, so that you may be sure and do thorough work.

By using crimson clover on corn land the yields have been very greatly increased. To best utilize the crop it must be plowed under for manure. In preparing land for corn or cotton plow the crimson clover under at least one month before planting time. This month must then be devoted to working the bare land into a good seed bed. In case the clover grows rapidly, it may be best to plow even earlier than this, as it should be plowed under before it blooms. Where crimson clover is turned under the plowing, except on deep sandy land, should be as deep as any that has been given the field for some years. If the land has never been plowed deep, then plow it five or six inches deep, but not over one inch deeper than it has been plowed before. Deep sandy lands should not be plowed too deep; five to six inches is deep enough.

GINS AND OIL MILLS DIVORCED

(By Associated Press.) Austin, Tex., Sept. 16.—The House passed the bill divorcing gins and oil mills, effective in nine months. It also passed the permanent warehouse bill, effective immediately.

LET'S WAKE UP.

By E. J. FOUNTAIN JR.
Did you know that lots of the cotton that goes through our compress goes to Sherman, Bonham, Corsicana and other towns no better than Bryan, to be made into cloth? We raise the raw materials and quit with that and let the other towns get the benefits from manufacture we should have.

Lots of us raise the objection that we cannot get the proper labor, but don't Sherman, Bonham and other cotton mill towns the size of Bryan get labor? Of course, if we sit and say we can't, without trying, we cannot. If we had to import a hundred families to get this labor, Mr. Merchant, what would this hundred families do for your business, as well as make a cotton mill?

Look at this, copied from the Textile Manufacturer, about a town that was even smaller than we were in 1900: "In 1890 the town had only about 1,000 inhabitants. In 1895 it had a little over 2,000. In 1900, there were 4,000, and today the big, busy, bustling community numbers more than 12,000 people, with half of them at work in industrial plants."

Our town can grow this way, too. If we will just go right after it and make some of these things come our way.
